

Kathy Bero

Proprietor

Spring Hill Farms, Watertown

Kathy Bero's degrees in Journalism and Environmental Sciences from the University of Wisconsin-Madison, have made her uniquely qualified to share the message of the myriad health benefits derived from anti-angiogenic foods. She has written many educational works including the national award-winning curriculum "It's All Connected" and the children's book "A Place at the Fire," Ms. Bero enjoyed a long advocacy career and several years of television production work. Ms. Bero's own four-year battle with inflammatory breast cancer, infiltrating ductal carcinoma, and head and neck cancer have created her passion and commitment to public education on the scientifically proven health benefits of certain foods. The healing properties of food became a part of her personal treatment plan and roadmap for her present advocacy work. The concept of the Genesis Farm was Ms. Bero's and her considerable talents as an organizer, communicator and consensus builder are now focused on making this dream a reality.

Ms. Bero was executive producer of the double Emmy Award winning 1998 documentary "Worth Fighting For" and has received many state and national awards for her work as an environmental advocate. She has served on many local and national boards of directors, including her present tenure on the Angiogenesis Foundation Advisory Board and Stillwaters Cancer Support Center.
